Today's Fashion

By VERA WIGTON

Several noteworthy style features are revealed in this charming evening gown. It is made of green taffeta and silver lace. The former is draped from one shoulder to the waist line so that a low waisted effect is attained.

The skirt is straight and fairly snug fitting, but a sense of width is achieved by the handsome ash-ended which result from the picturesque draping of the taffeta.

A strap of jeweled flowers is attached to the silver lace which forms part of the corsage.

Revelations of A Wife

ADELE GARRISON

We drifted through the moonlight, Dicky and I—for I held down the speed of the car until its motion could be called little else than drifting—savoring to the full the exquisite beauty of the mild, late spring night.

"If you know an untrodden path to this heavenly beach of yours, please take it," Dicky requested shortly after we had left the farm-house. "I don't feel like main traveled roads tonight."

"We can keep off the main highway until we are within a mile and a half of the beach," I replied. "After that there is but the one road."

"Here's hoping it won't be popular tonight," he rejoined.

I made no answer, for through experience and hearsay I knew there was no chance of our having the beach to ourselves. But there was no use to dwell upon the fact. I was too blissfully content to mar in any manner the too quickly passing moments. I know Dicky shared my mood, for neither of us spoke again until we had rounded a curve we approached the corner where we must turn into the main road. Then I said softly:

"Here is where we strike the main road, dear. I suppose I'd better speed the car up a bit."

"Yes—yes, which only would lead an unprejudiced observer to believe we were following an imaginary funeral procession," he replied, "or had one eye trained on an astral Fifth avenue traffic cop."

"I grant you the traffic cop," I returned, "but it is easy to see you are unfamiliar with rural funerals. I drove Mrs. Ticer to one last year and I give you my word I had to go twenty-five miles an hour part of the time to keep my place in the procession."

"Hurry him to his grave!" he quoted, then added impatiently: "Heavens! I feel as if some one were walking over mine or yours. What ever did you bring up a subject like that for?"

"Do You Remember—?" There is a strain of superstition in Dicky, some far-off Celtic ancestor, I suppose, which crops out, to my amusement or irritation, as my mood may determine. I felt neither emotion at his unreasonable query, for he himself had first uttered the words "funeral procession." I felt only a vague disappointment wonder that the perfect moments which the drive had brought us could be so easily marred. Happiness, especially of the marital variety, was like that, I reflected—a beautiful shimmering thing of gossamer, which might be the tenderest handling could tear.

Dicky had taken his head from his resting place against mine when we had turned into the main road, and I had accelerated the speed of the car. But his arm had remained around my waist. Now, as if he had sensed my disappointment, he tightened his clasp, murmuring contritely:

"Terrible sorry, sweetheart. Didn't mean to be cross. Forget it, and love your boy again."

"I haven't stopped," I murmured shyly, forgetting, as would any woman, that there had been even the faintest shadow upon me, and I heard my husband give a happy, satisfied little chuckle.

"Burn up the rest of this mile and a half," he pleaded. "There must be some sheltered nook along that beach where it will be safe to kiss you as you deserve. Heigh ho! I feel as if we'd turned back the pages of the years to that one before we were married. Do you remember the night when we went on that motor boat party and strolled along the beach at Point Lookout?"

A Surprise.

Did I remember? I had not words to tell even my husband how every precious incident of that whirlwind wooing was graven on my heart. Never so royal a lover as Dicky, never so wonderful a husband—in the thrill and thrall of remembrance I blotted out all the faults I had discovered in him, as I hoped he was overlooking my imperfections.

The car rounded a turn in the road just after he finished speaking, and there, spread out before us, dancing, glittering in the moonbeams, were the ocean waves, running up on the broad, sandy beach with stealthy swishing whispers, which had in them the sinister note never absent from the ocean no matter how calm it may be.

At our left curved a long line of high sand dunes. At our right a coast guard life saving station gleamed starkly white. And drawn up on the beach, as closely ranked as if on a crowded city parking place, a dozen cars stood.

Dicky's first examination was one of ecstatic admiration for the beauty spread out before him. I had known that his artist's soul would revel in it, and I expected that he would forget even me for a time. But a muttered imprecation upon the occupants of the other cars, as unreasonable as it was heartless, told me that he had not forgotten his desire to exclude every one but me from the moonlit beach.

"The car's safe enough, isn't it?" he queried after a pause. "Give me the key and let's get out and go for a stroll. The night is young."

I obeyed him, and he helped me tenderly from the car. As he did so, another car puffed up behind ours and stopped as its driver turned off the switch. And then a clear, girlish voice called excitedly:

"Oh, Dr. Pettit, there's Mrs. Graham!"

Advice to Girls

By ANNIE LAURIE

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I need some advice as the man I love, cares for me only as a friend and the man who loves me appeals to me only as a friend. Is there anything I can do to win this man for whom I care? What is good for making eyelashes grow?

PERPLEXED CANDY KID:

PERPLEXED CANDY KID: It is very hard to advise in your case, as you realize no one can be made to care for a person at will. Charming manners and amiable disposition of cultivated will help to attract people to you. Be careful of your English and study your dress to see that you wear things most becoming to your style. Plain clothes are always more admired by worth while men, than gaudy things. Never use anything on your eyelashes as you may lose all your powers.

ANNIE LAURIE.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

The circumstances about which you ask me are these. The woman I love is married and refuses to leave her husband and marry me, although she loves me and not her husband.

UNHAPPY MAN:

UNHAPPY MAN: You should realize that no woman can cast aside the marriage vows so lightly. If you were a man of honor you would not make it hard for her by urging her to do something against her better conscience. Please go away and let her work out her problem in peace.

ANNIE LAURIE.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am 16 years old and have not gone very much, but recently I met a boy who asked me to kiss him, but I refused and then he asked me for a date, but I also refused that. Since that I have tried to forget him, but I think about him a great deal. How could I meet him again? BROKEN HEARTED.

BROKEN HEARTED: You are much too young to bother your head over such trivial matters. You used excellent judgment in the matter of handling the altogether fresh young man and when you are both older he will appreciate you very much indeed.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

Am a Spaniard and am in love with a girl who lives with an uncle and aunt who very much disapprove of me simply because I am a Spaniard. Would you advise me to elope with this girl who loves me as much as I love her? LEON.

LEON: By all means take the girl to the nearest preacher and then never let her regret the step by being thoughtless and unkind to her. ANNIE LAURIE.

IN BED EIGHT MONTHS

Cause—Change of Life. How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Got Me Up

Afton, Tenn.—"I want other suffering women to know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. During the Change of Life I was in bed for eight months and had two good doctors treating me but they did me no good. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I did and in a short time felt better. I had all kinds of bad spells, but they all left me. Now when I feel weak and nervous I take the Vegetable Compound and it always does me good. I wish all women would try it during the Change of Life for I know it will do them good."

—Mrs. A. KELLER, Afton, Tennessee.

Women from forty-five to fifty years of age should take warning from such symptoms as heat flashes, palpitation of the heart, smothering or fainting spells, or spots before the eyes, and prepare their system for this perfectly natural change by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has helped many, many women through this trying period, just as it did Mrs. Keller.
